Astronaut training is exacting and rigorous. It is designed to prepare humans for the conditions of living and working in space and on other worlds. For example, a good candidate must have the ability to endure the rigors of lift-off and to function in weightlessness. All astronauts, including pilots, commanders, mission specialists, science specialists, or payload managers, must be at least 147 centimeters tall, have good visual acuity, and normal blood pressure. Beyond that, there is no age limit. Most astronaut trainees are between the ages of 25 and 46, although older people have also flown to space later in their careers. NASA continually tests ideas for new spacesuits that will keep astronauts safe on the Moon, in space, and on Mars. Getting Off the Planet book. Astronaut training describes the complex process of preparing astronauts for their space missions before, during and after the flight, which includes medical tests, physical training, extra-vehicular activity (EVA) training, procedure training, rehabilitation process, as well as training on experiments they will accomplish during their stay in space. The training is geared to the special conditions and environments astronauts will be confronted with during launch, in space, and during landing. All
