(2012) design loss-framed incentives in which teachers receive bonus payments at the beginning of the year that they must pay back at the end of the year if their students do not improve sufficiently on a standardized test. They find that the impact of the loss-framed incentives on maths achievement is equivalent to improving teacher quality by a standard deviation. In this vein, Heller et al. (2013) test a non-cognitive intervention among US middle and secondary students that are at risk for violence and dropping out of school. The intervention builds on techniques from cognitive behavioural therapy (CBT) to teach adolescents social-cognitive skills such as self-control and anger management.
